From the Editor

IN THIS ISSUE ...

This issue brings together articles published over the years in Political Science Quarterly on topics of particular importance to U.S. national security. The articles are written by some of America’s preeminent scholars and have been selected from PSQ’s most accessed list over the years. We prepared this issue as PSQ’s contribution to the 2016 presidential election debate. It should serve as a tool that could guide our readers when thinking of persistent challenges and ongoing threats to American foreign policy.

I thank the authors of the articles in this issue. I am especially grateful to Robert Jervis, a long-term member of PSQ’s editorial board, for writing an overview discussing the intersection between foreign policy and presidential elections and how the selected articles can inform our understanding of critical foreign policy mistakes and opportunities.

DEMETRIOS JAMES CARALEY

Nine Presidential Elections, 1980–2012

Edited and Overview by
Demetrios James Caraley

Available in print and at www.psqonline.org