MAILING: THE AMERICAN JOURNAL of ECONOMICS AND SOCIOLOGY, ISSN 0002-9246 (print); ISSN 1536-7150 (online), is published five times a year during the months of Jan, Mar, May, Sep and Nov by Wiley Subscription Services, Inc., a Wiley Company, and is published in five issues per year. The first issue, John Dewey, commended this journal for its intention to promote “synthesis in the social field.” In order to develop concerned with the human condition and the ways in which institutions support or undermine the full flourishing of the human person, prescient views on topics such as racial equality, governance, and theories of history. As these examples indicate, George was in keeping with its origins, the ideas of the American economic and social philosopher Henry George (1839–1897) will receive emphasis in this journal.

AIMS AND SCOPE: The AMERICAN JOURNAL of ECONOMICS and SOCIOLOGY was founded in 1941, with support from the Robert Schalkenbach Foundation, to encourage the development of transdisciplinary solutions to social problems. In the journal’s first issue, John Dewey commended this journal for its intention to promote “synthesis in the social field.” In order to develop a more synthetic approach to practical problems, the AJS board has decided to publish five thematic issues each year, with each issue devoted to a specific problem, condition, or methodological controversy.

In keeping with its origins, the ideas of the American economic and social philosopher Henry George (1839-1897) will receive special consideration. Although George is best known for his views on taxation and concentrated landlord ownership, he also held prescient views on topics such as racial equality, governance, and theories of history. As these examples indicate, George was concerned with the human condition and the ways in which institutions support or undermine the full flourishing of the human spirit. That orientation will guide the selection of issues for the journal.
