EDITORIAL STATEMENT

The Australian Journal of Politics and History aims to publish scholarly research and writing of the highest quality. Because the journal reaches a wide and diverse audience, contributors must address a significant research problem, which would be of general interest to those working in the fields of history, political studies, and international affairs. Preference will be given to papers on the politics and history of Australia and modern Europe, intellectual history, political theory, and the history of political thought. The journal will also publish articles in the fields of international politics, Australian foreign policy, and Australia’s relations with countries of the Asia-Pacific region. Purely descriptive papers will not be accepted. The editors welcome the contribution of shorter critical notices and research notes, and will endeavour to publish controversies and symposia. The journal invites expressions of interest in producing a single issue on a particular theme or topic of contemporary political and historical interest. Prospective guest editors should submit proposals to the editors.

The journal aims to publish scholarly research and writing of the highest quality. It welcomes submissions on a wide range of topics related to Australian politics, Australian history, and international relations. Articles that explore the intersection between politics and history, intellectual history, political history, and science and international relations are particularly encouraged. Purely descriptive papers will not be accepted. The journal will publish articles in the fields of international relations, Australian politics, and Australian history. The Editors welcome submissions on broader dynamics of international and Australian foreign policy. While the journal has a primary focus on Australian politics, Australian history, and international relations, it also welcomes submissions on related topics. The journal is open to a wide range of methodologies and approaches, and accepts both empirical and theoretical work. The editors are committed to ensuring that the journal is a forum for the exchange of ideas and perspectives on the politics, history, and international relations of Australia and the world. The journal is published in four issues per year. It is available in both print and online formats, and is accessible to researchers, policymakers, and the general public.
