The Journal's geographical scope covers Europe, Mediterranean lands and the classical world from early prehistory to the end of the medieval period. Subject areas include archaeology, art, and art history, architecture, numismatics, the applications of scientific analysis and theoretical approaches. Interim or final reports on excavations will not normally be published although general reviews of major excavation programmes may be accepted.

Papers should normally not exceed 8,000 words, and longer papers will only be considered if the authors make a particular case. The Notes section is intended for shorter contributions and for debate.

Potential contributors are invited to write to the Editorial Assistant requesting 'Author Guidelines'. The Author Guidelines can also be viewed online at: http://onlinelibrary.wiley.com/journal/10.1111/(ISSN)1468-0092/homepage/ForAuthors.html. Only papers presented in a manner conforming with the ‘Notes’ will be considered by the Editors for publication.

The Editors wish it to be known that the publication of a paper does not necessarily imply that they accept the views and opinions expressed in it.
